Cast in bronze, silver and glass, his newest works portrays the impact of the wind, rain and earth on the human form. "I need my sculpture to live and breathe and to be powerful in their own energy and movement" states the artist.

Williams-Ellis learnt to carve wood and to draw in Florence where he was taught by legendary teacher Signorina Nerina Simi. He went on to join later a community of marble sculptors at Pietrasanta, Tuscany, under the Carrara mountains before returning to Britain to sculpt professionally.

One of the first sculptors to experiment with the method of patination, the process of mixing chemical elements into natural objects, to create this new series of sculpted archers will be cast in flame-bright scarlets, echoing the fires in which they were forged.

To view how William Ellis manages to harness raw energy to a new artistic level, you will have to attend London's Portland Gallery between the 3rd and the 23rd of December.
